Two Good Examples

The two leading houses of entertainment in this city are undergoing a thorough painting at the hands of their respective owners, and the example is well worth the following by a number of others in the downtown district. The home settlement in Astoria is bright and brilliant with new and bright paints, and the sooner the business section becomes infected the handsomer and more attractive it will appear to the summer tourist.

High School Social—

The high school entertainment at Logan's Hall last evening was a complete success. The excellent program rendered lasted until about nine o'clock the floor was then cleared and dancing was indulged in after which refreshments were served. IN FATERNAL SPIRIT GATHERED

THREE FINNISH GRAND LODGES IN SESSION HERE, SEEKING COMMON BASIS FOR UNIFICATION

There are, at present, forty-one bright, clever Finn brothers in this city, the guests of the local lodge of the United Finnish Brotherhood of the World, which latter organization has seventeen lodges scattered throughout California, Oregon, Washington, Montana and Alaska, the local branch having the record membership of between 600 and 700.

The visitors represent two other Finnish organizations, with practically the identical objects sought and maintained by the United Finnish Brotherhood, and the purpose of the visit is, if possible, to find a common level of unity and amalgamation, upon which all three shall ultimately gather and work out the splendid destiny of the Finns in America.

Thirty-two of the visitors are members of the grand lodge of the Knights of Kaleva, with sixteen lodges established in the middle west and the east, notably in Michigan, Montana, Wyoming and Colorado; and the other nine are grand lodge representatives from the Kaleva Brotherhood, with seven lodges on the Pacific Slope.

These arch-fraternal have come here to meet and confer with the Finnish Brotherhood of the World, with a view of reaching a predicate for the full and final amalgamation of the three organizations, and the conference here is but one of a series that has been going on for a year or more, past.

While the three bodies stand for the same principles and aims, involving the general up-lift of the Finns in this country, their rituals and laws vary more or less widely, and it is an accepted theory with all concerned that a uniform system of work and forms upon a common base, will subserve the convenience of the race interested and not at all impair the efficacy of the original purpose, dear to them all.

There will be three or four more days devoted to this good work, though, at the present writing nothing definite nor conclusive had been attained in the conferences, save that there was absolutely no friction pending, but only a careful and long-drawn scrutiny into the plans suggested in this great behalf, all of which takes time and patience and a perfectly unanimous understanding and agreement on every point raised. The task is no light one and has the merit of engaging the best thought and sentiment of the men charged with it.

It will be a feather in Astoria's cap if these good men shall find the solution they are seeking in this city, and their fellow-citizens will not fail to give them the gratulation that shall be their due upon that happy attainment.

The unification of these three grand lodges will have direct and important bearing on the lives and interests of over 5,000 Finns.

Glories Of Mont Blanc—

There is nothing, perhaps, in the whole scheme of moving-pictures that strikes the beholder with the intense notion of realism, as when the stalwart grandeur of mighty mountain ranges are thrown within his vision, and he knows that they are only to be seen by travelling thousands of miles over land and water. The machines at the Waldorf concert hall are illustrating the vast sublimities of Mont Blanc on their films this week, and they are superb and interesting to the last degree. Next week, these screens will show the sprightly details of the O'Brien-Burns fistic engagement, from the hand-shake in the arena to the throwing up of the sponge, and there will be no single thing left out either.
